

Changi Airport to welcome Air Macau as its first new carrier in 2011

SINGAPORE, 29 December 2010 – Singapore Changi Airport will welcome Air Macau on 3 January 2011. The carrier is the first to join Changi's growing network of airlines in the new year.

Air Macau, a full service carrier, will operate twice-weekly passenger services to Macau on Airbus A321 aircraft with a capacity of 178 passengers in a two-class configuration. It will operate at Changi Terminal 2.

Flight Number	Route	STD	STA	Aircraft Type	Days of Ops
NX860	Macau-Singapore	0200hr	0550hr	A321	Mondays and Fridays
NX859	Singapore-Macau	0650hr	1030hr	A321	Mondays and Fridays

With the addition of Air Macau, the Singapore-Macau route will be served by three carriers¹ operating a total of 32 flights a week.

To celebrate its commencement of operations at Changi Airport, Air Macau is offering a one-for-one promotion for return business class fares at S$1,999 for a pair of tickets. Economy class tickets start from S$199 (one-way) and S$299 (return). Fares exclude all applicable airport fees and surcharges, and terms and conditions apply.²

In 2010, nine new airlines commenced operations at Changi Airport – the two most recent being Philippine carrier Southeast Asian Airlines (SEAIR) and Moscow-based Transaero

¹ Jetstar Asia and Tiger Airways operate daily flights to Macau.

² The promotion period is from now until 28 March 2011. For more information, please email airmacau@aviationservices.com.sg or call +65 6226 1755.

Airlines, both of which commenced flights to Changi Airport this month. SEAIR operates twice daily service between Singapore and Clark in the Philippines, while Transaero flies twice weekly (Mondays and Wednesdays) on the Moscow-Bali-Singapore-Moscow route.

With the addition of Air Macau, SEAIR and Transaero Airlines, Changi Airport serves 101 airlines operating more than 5,200 scheduled flights each week, connecting Singapore to over 200 cities in 60 countries and territories.
